

A SPECIMEN OF OLDER PIMA BAJO

David L. Shaul

Presented here is a selection of sentences from the Confessionario en Lengua Pima as transcribed by Smith (1862). This material is presented as speech events (pairs of questions and answers) that could have actually happened during a confession. The topic is the Third Commandment, which has to do with the observation of the Sabbath. The questions are of the type that a man might have been asked.

An older variety of Pima Bajo (Sonora, Mexico), as opposed to Pima Alta or Piman (Pima and Papago dialects), is known to us through the Arte de la Lengua Pima o ... Nevome, which is also transcribed in Smith (1862). The Arte is accompanied in the same manuscript by a Doctrina and the Confessionario. A manuscript Vocabulario existed as a companion volume to the Arte. Benz (ca. 1796) may be a copy of this Vocabulario. Pennington (1979) has transcribed this Vocabulario. He (1979:xix) attributes these materials to Baltasar de Loaysa (1608 to 1692). This would date our oldest record of Pima Bajo between 1650 and 1670, considerably earlier than most of the previous suggestions about the material's age. Presumably the Sermons in the Pima Language (Moyano, n.d.) belong to this tradition, which centered around the town of Ónava. Previous work on Pima Bajo was done by the first missionary in Ónava, Fr. Francisco Oliñano, who worked there from 1621 to 1647.

A record of the last stages of Pima Bajo in Ónava is found in Hale (1964, 1979). An accurate English translation of Smith (1862) is Thorn (1978), and a grammatical synopsis of the early material is Shaul (1979).

Although a historical synthesis has not yet been attempted, a number of archaic features have been noted in Nevome. Among these are the following.

- (1) /p t k/ exist as voiceless and voiced allophones; in Piman these differences have become phonemic.
- (2) /t d/ has been palatalized to /č ſ/ before the vowels /i ɿ u/.
- (3) /n/ has not palatalized before /i ɿ/.
- (4) stem-final vowels have not been reduced to voiceless /ɨ/.

Undoubtedly, there are perhaps other features of Nevome that are conservative.

An explanation of the phonemes of Nevome (interpreted from the original orthography), abbreviations used in textual analysis, and references cited are given below. Notes to Smith's transcribed Spanish translation (given along with an English translation) follow the text.

Orthography and Suggested Phonemic Interpretation

Each grouping represents a phoneme. Vowels are as in Spanish, except for /ɨ/, which is an unrounded high central vowel. Consonants are similar to Spanish: stops are unaspirated and vary in voicing. Other distinctions are noted beside individual items.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Pennington (1979:3) notes that 'Presumably, the apostrophes in words such as a'agui indicate contractions... However, the compiler of the vocabulary was not consistent in the use of the symbol; it might also have been used to indicate a glottal.'

Orthography	Phoneme	Remarks
	/a/
	/p - b/
<c k qu g>	/k - g/
<t d>	/t - d/
<e>	/?/
<h j gu>	/h/
	/i/
<l>	/l/	Spanish loans only.
<m>	/m/
<n>	/n/
<o>	/o/
<r>	/r/	Tap or allophone of rh .
<rh>	/t/ or /d/	Retroflex, alveolar (?).
<s>	/s/
	/u/ or /i/
<v b>	/w - bilabial v/
<x>	/š/	Retroflex.

Resumen

Se presenta en este trabajo una selección de pequeños textos, tomados del Confessionario en lengua pima, según la transcripción de Buckingham Smith (1862). Dicho Confessionario, junto con otros manuscritos en pima bajo, se atribuye a Baltasar de Loaysa (1608-1692). De ser así, como lo hace notar el autor de este trabajo, estos textos serían los testimonios más antiguos en pima bajo.
